Frank Miles discovered he had a knack for entertaining people at a young age. Passing on a scholarship to work as a street performer, Frank knew he had found his dream, even though his parents were less than thrilled! The bright lights of Las Vegas followed shortly thereafter.

Eventually, Frank began to feel afraid of letting people down, of chasing his dreams, and of giving up the security of a good job. He started to turn to high-risk activities such as rock-climbing (without ropes or gear) and hang-gliding to give him that feeling that he believed had been missing from his life.

In an event that has shaped his life dramatically, Frank suffered a horrifying accident while hang-gliding. He was injured badly, and his heart actually stopped for over a minute while in the emergency room. To no one's surprise, Frank battled back and eventually made a full recovery. The 14 inch scar on his chest is a constant reminder of just how lucky he is to be alive.

Once Frank had made a full recovery, and equipped with some newfound perspective, he took to the stage using comic monologues, music, magic, and juggling to create a show full of laughs and thrills. He wanted to drive home the lesson that the only sure bet in life is that if you don't try, you will fail.

The response has been incredible. Frank Miles is now a highly sought-after speaker-entertainer. He has performed his keynote presentation "Laugh at Fear!" for delighted audiences as large as 15,000 people, oftentimes ending with standing ovations and people going home with a big smile on their face.

Remember – true courage is not facing death in daredevil pursuits, but to face life head-on every single day!

Recently Frank brought his courageous attitude to an audition for America's Got Talent. Before a TV audience of ten to fifteen million people, he juggled three 500,000-volt stun guns and showed that no one can stop you from dreaming and taking a chance on that dream.
